CALL FOR PAPERS

As an archeologist Christopher Tilley reminds us, „A landscape has ontological import because it is lived in and through, mediated, worked on and altered”. The scholar contends that landscapes are experienced in practice while performing various daily activities.

The landscape is an intrinsic component of the theatre and everyday life of Waław and Erdmute Sobaszek – artists and runners of the Węgajty Theatre. At the beginning of the 1980s they arrived in a small rural settlement of Węgajty, located in northern Poland. The Sobaszeks settled in a destroyed, abandoned farm at the edge of the forest and became one of the most significant representants of the Polish alternative theatre.

The working session, that is a part of the conference Węgajty as a verb? landscapes • communities • borderlands, seeks to explore the role of landscape in theatrical activities undertaken by artists around the world. We invite submissions from scholars who are investigating the relationship between theatre and landscape (broadly conceived). The goal of this working session is to foster discussion about the role of landscape in shaping theatrical activities and the role of theatre in „the proces of formation of the landscape” [Tim Ingold].

Selected topics papers may address (but are not limited to) include:

- Synergy/disturbance between theatre and nature
- Theatre and rural landscape
- Theatre and cultural/natural landscape

[A geographer Yi-Fu Tuan mobilized a term ‘topophilia’ that expresses „human being’s affective ties with the material environment”]

- Environmental theatre
- Theatre and ecology
- Theatre and ‘imagined landscapes’

[Tim Ingold claims that „landscapes are also imagined, not only perceived”]

- Theatre and ‘landscape-phenomena’

[Due to a philosopher and an art historian Mateusz Salwa „landscape is perceived by people in a certain way” as an aethetic experience]

- Spectatorship and landscape

The aim of the working session is to rethink theatre within landscape from a range of disciplines. We are especially interested in papers that employ a lens of humanistic geography, anthropology and philosophy.

Title: konferencja Wegajty, name of the participant

In advance to the working session (3 weeks before the session), papers will be circulated between participants. Participants will be divided thematically into small subgroups, providing feedback and posing broader questions raised by the papers. The full working session will then convene for a discussion, finding valuable connections between papers. Each subgroup will share their discussions with the group as a whole.

A permanent effect of the working session will be the publication of selected papers in the scientific quarterly 'Pamiętnik Teatralny' [Theatrical Memoir] (first half of 2023, <https://czasopisma.ispan.pl/index.php/pt/index>).
